ROADS

An index of locations and access to adoption records.

SUMMARY

Between 1898 and 2003, approximately 21,000 adoptions have been granted or recognised by the Supreme, and then the Family, Court in Western Australia.

Application to access Adoption Files held by the Family Court of Western Australia is made through the Department for Community Development.

ROADS – Records Of ADoptionS (Location and Access) has been developed by the Department for Community Development as part of a suite of resources which aim to make historical records more accessible.

The purpose of ROADS is to help people who were involved in adoption to find information about themselves or their family. It is designed to be used principally by agencies assisting individuals in this search process.

The Department for Community Development has a commitment to enable access to personal information in accordance with appropriate protocols. ROADS identifies sources of information within the Department and elsewhere. Each organisation will have their own rules governing access, and people should be prepared to identify themselves as bona fide inquirers.

The information sought by people as they discover their personal history, or that of their family, may seem insensitive or callous by today's standards, and may make difficult reading. People are encouraged to ensure they have adequate personal and emotional support during the search and discovery processes.

This book is arranged into seven sections.

Section 1, "Records Held by the Department for Community Development" outlines records held by The Department for Community Development which may be useful or relevant to people who have been involved in adoption.

Section 2, "Non-Government Sources" outlines the contact details for non-government organisations where resident children may have been adopted, or which may have information pertinent to the place where the child was born or resident.

Section 3, "Records Held by Hospitals" overviews records holdings and outlines contact details for public and private hospitals still open in Western Australia that may hold relevant maternity records for birth mothers or babies that were subsequently adopted.

Section 4, "Previous Services for Maternity" lists many hospitals and midwives who are no longer providing maternity services. In some cases, contact details are provided but generally this section can only provide limited information about the facility. Also presented is a list of midwives practising in the early years of the last century for whom no location is available. However, limited details regarding registered midwives can be obtained through the Nurses' Registration Board.

Section 5, "Useful Links" provides contact details for organisations that may assist enquirers find information about their own or their family's history.

Section 6, "Snapshots of Maternity and Adoption in WA" provides some interesting historical information about maternity in the early years of European settlement in this State and Government attitudes to adoption throughout the twentieth century, presented in a series of brief overviews, or 'snapshots'.

Section 7 is a Statistics Appendix which provides information not only about the number of adoptions and applications for adoption, but also more recent information about enquiries from adopted children, their birth and adoptive parents and other relatives.

The introductory paragraphs to each section give pointers to other sources of information.

We gratefully acknowledge the efforts of officers from all the many organisations who gladly provided information for this research.

This research was funded by The Department for Community Development (Project Managers Ms Jillian Lewis, Ms Loraine Bird, Ms Daphne Cross and assistance from Ms Debbie Cooley) and the principal primary research was undertaken with the cooperation of the Family Court of Australia (WA) and the Department of Health in Western Australia

Looking West

"Looking West – A Guide to Aboriginal Records in Western Australia" was prepared by the State Records Taskforce in response to Recommendation 23 of "Bringing them home", the report of the National Inquiry into the Separation of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Children from their Families" in April 1997. "Looking West" details the location of records, type of service, years of operation, information in records and contact details for organisations who hold or have held records relating to Aboriginal people in Western Australia.

"Looking West" can be viewed on the Department for Community Development's website at http://www.lookingwest.communitydevelopment.wa.gov.au

Native Welfare Records

Organisation Generating

Native Welfare Department

Record

Dates From 1921 to 1969

Description

Client files from the Native Welfare Department and previous departments dealing with Aboriginal people. Information is recorded on Births and Deaths, as well as on Marriages, as the Protector had to approve all the marriages. As a permit was required for employing an Aboriginal person, records were kept on employment and finances. The department sometimes paid the medical expenses of Aboriginal people when treated by a doctor. Police inspected the communities regularly and a census of those present was taken.

Earlier files are held at the State Records Office (Perth), listed under Aboriginal Affairs Department. Note that some Native Welfare files were converted to Community Welfare files. See also entry for the Family Information Research System – FIRS.

Access

A Past Adoption Registration Form needs to be completed and access is restricted to clients and direct line family descendants. There is no charge. This information is not available to researchers.

Signposts - A Guide for Children and Young People in Care from 1920

Organisation Generating Record Department for Community Development

Dates 1894 onwards

Description Web-based guide outlining the history and current contact details for residential child care facilities. Children who were subsequently adopted, or young pregnant women, may have spent time in some of these facilities.

No client files are included in Signposts.

Access Signposts is via the Department for Community Development's website:

http://signposts.communitydevelopment.wa.gov.au .

NON-GOVERNMENT SOURCES

Records, photographs and admission / discharge registers held by private sector organisations (generally those that provided residential care) may also be relevant to people who were subsequently placed for adoption.

People seeking to access records held by Catholic residential agencies (present or historic) should consult the excellent guide "A Piece of the Story, a National Directory of Records of Catholic Organisations Caring for Children Separated from Families" (1999), available from the Australia Catholic Social Welfare Commission (or on their web site at www.acswc.org.au)

This list excludes hospitals, which are addressed in Section 3, "Records Held by Hospitals".

Residential care was provided by religious as well as secular and state organisations. Sometimes, children were adopted from these facilities. Only the Catholic and Seventh-Day Adventist Churches, however, appear to have engaged in adoption services in an organised way.

Any family search activity may profit from a visit to one of the Family History Centres of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints (Mormon). A range of Family History Centres is available through the telephone book, under the Church's main listing in the white pages.

In the case of adoptions from Salvation Army, Anglican, Uniting (Methodist, Presbyterian, Congregational) churches and Baptist Union Churches, where there was no centralised role in arranging adoptions, it is possible that local Ministers may have played some kind of facilitation role. Additionally, those organisations operated residential child care facilities and it is possible that some children were adopted from those Homes. Thus, the contact details for historical information for the Salvation Army, Uniting and Baptist Union Churches are in the following list and Swanleigh has been included as the most useful starting point for information about children adopted from that institution or its predecessors.

RECORDS HELD BY HOSPITALS

This section outlines the contact details for hospitals which had a maternity service in this State, and which are still offering services (Section 4 deals with hospitals that are now closed). When searching for records relating to maternity admissions, you will need to know the birth mother's name as babies were typically listed on their mother's record (until the 1980's when the practise changed in some hospitals or if the babie's health required a separate, individual admission).

Please be aware that information relating to the birth mother's admission is confidential to her. However, there may be clinical information deemed relevant to the child that was born which can be released (eg time of birth).

PREVIOUS SERVICES FOR MATERNITY

The following hospital names were generated from information obtained from a search of the Western Australian Department of Health archives, and are unlikely to be neither a complete list of hospitals or "lying in homes", nor an accurate representation of the year(s) each hospital was functioning.

Each facility listed here was, however, either licensed at some stage by the Department of Health as a Maternity Hospital or Lying-In Home or is listed as a maternity hospital in contemporary postal and telephone lists. Unfortunately, discovering the years in which the hospitals were actually licensed has proved difficult. The dates given are based on correspondence recorded for that year, or from extant lists. Notably, too, there are spelling and other recording errors in the original data. As far as possible, addresses were confirmed or obtained from the Telephone Directories and Post Office Lists held in the JS Battye Library in Perth. Until 1925, Telephone Directories should be searched by either hospital or midwife category, for example, "Hospital, St Anne's" or "Nurse Jones". From 1926, hospitals are listed in the classified section at the rear of the directory; there is no "Nurse" listing in the alphabetical section, so each must be found by surname ("Jones, Nurse). These directories give a much fuller list of nurses and their hospitals. We have confined this document to include only those facilities or nurses who were known to offer midwifery.

Where an old "government" or "board" hospital is named, a link to the current hospital in the area has been provided. Contact details for modern health services are provided in the section of ROADS, "Records Held by Hospitals".

Interested researchers might try the following sources for further information:

- ◆ JS Battye Library, Perth (Post Office and Telephone Directories, newspapers. Private collections).
- Department of Health, Western Australia (Health Information Centre, Archives).
- State Records Office for Medical Department Annual Reports, which can give interesting background information about the hospital.
- ◆ Local libraries in the town of interest they often provide access to historical sources within the town, referrals to people who have other information, or can be links to local museums and collections. This might be the most useful way of tracing lying-in homes or small maternity hospitals, in both metropolitan and regional/rural areas. It may also be possible to be put in touch with long-time residents for anecdotal information. Researchers should be mindful, though, that information generated from informal sources may not give a full, or 'correct', picture of events as they occurred.

The following list is ordered by suburb/town, as that is the information most likely to appear on the birth certificate (if the hospital itself is not named).

| | | | | It is possible that St Helen's closed around 1959. No records exist at Fremantle Hospital and further enquiries with the Department of Health have failed to identify anything (though it may help to review Health Department file MD 5568, as per Index Card). Local information suggests that St Helen's (as Moss Street Lodge) may have been a government receiving depot for babies awaiting adoption. However, enquiries with The Department for Community Development officers have not confirmed this. The current contact details for Fremantle Hospital are contained in the section of ROADS, "Records Held by Hospitals". |

SNAPSHOTS OF MATERNITY AND ADOPTION IN WA

Snapshot: Acute Hospitals in Early Colonial WA

The following information is drawn from research undertaken by Frank Hansford-Miller for a much broader, and very interesting, study into medical services in the colony.

Table 3: Acute Hospitals in Early Colonial Western Australia

Source: Hansford-Miller, Frank. (1997). Hospital Services in Early Colonial Western Australia. A History of Medicine in Western Australia 1829 – 1870. Vol. 11

| Hospital | Year | Location/Comments |
|--|--------|--|
| Garrison Hospital (Tent) | 1826 | Military Compound, King George Sound, Albany. |
| Military Infirmary (Built) | 1829 | Western side of Parade Ground, Albany. |
| Colonial Hospital (Tent) | 1829 | Garden Island, as first immigrants awaited settlement on mainland. First English baby born to colonists here on 3 August 1829. |
| Perth Military Hospital (Marquee) | 1829 | Near Town Hall and Cathedral Ave, Perth. First English baby born on mainland on 17 September 1829. |
| Colonial Hospital (Rented Hut) | 1830 | St George's Tce, opposite Government House, east of Irwin St, Perth. |
| Temporary Hospital, Augusta | 1830 | To service the garrison and families attached to it at Augusta after their arrival there in August, 1830. |
| Hospital, Albany | 1838 | Established in the Government Reserve. |
| Colonial Hospital (Built – but not well fit for purpose) | 1840 | Central square, near St George's Tce and Hay St. It was poorly designed and located, being near the residential housing of the wealthier citizens on St George's Tce and Hay St (none of whom used the hospital, being treated at home). |
| New Colonial Hospital, Perth | 1855 | Eastern end of Murray St (then Goderich St), near the Roman Catholic church (now St Mary's Cathedral). Parts of this building, which used convict labour in construction, remain in use by Royal Perth Hospital. |
| District Hospital, Bunbury | 1850's | Established after the arrival of convicts. |
| District Hospital, York | 1860's | On the site of the Convict Depot (in what had been previously used as a kitchen), using convict orderlies to cope with demand. |
| Military Hospital, Fremantle | 1860's | |

Convicts were transported from England from 1850 to 1868. There were 9,668 men (no women) convicts sent to the Colony and housed in Depots throughout the State. Each of the depots had an Infirmary attached and these often became that district's hospital once transportation ceased. The Colony operated a "Ticket of Leave" system whereby the convict could move gradually from government control to work for an employer and eventually a Conditional Pardon leading to freedom provided he did not return to England until the expiration of his initial term. By 1865, there were 7,113 convicts resident in the Colony in various stages of 'freedom'.

Convict Hospitals Established by 1865 (by District) Fremantle Attached to Fremantle Gaol in the early 1850s. The complex also contained a large residence for the Comptroller of Convicts, known as "The Knowle", which became Fremantle hospital and remains in use as part of the modern facility. The first Medical Board for Fremantle was set up in 1852.

Swan Valley
Plantagenet (including Albany)
Victoria (including New Norcia)
Wellington (including Bunbury)
Sussex (including Busselton)
York
Murray (including Mandurah)
Toodyay

Each of these regions would have been serviced by what started as a Convict Hospital (a fairly primitive infirmary) which were often demolished and developed into a Government Hospital (not always on the same site) with a Government Medical Officer appointed from Perth as the region prospered. Albany, Bunbury, Geraldton, Northam, Busselton and York had hospital services dating from at least the 1860s and possibly the 1850s, with one of the earliest being at Roebourne.

Snapshot: Maternity Hospitals – Issues 1909-1916

The following information is drawn from the "Maternity" and "Vital Statistics" sections of Annual Reports of the Commissioner of Public Health 1909 to 1916. It briefly outlines a range of issues germane to our topic, including the training and licensing of midwives and maternity homes, and general attitudes to birth and children.

It is implied from the Commissioner's reports, and explicit in correspondence, that women in the State were organized and vocal in their call for a dedicated maternity and gynaecological facility that was owned and controlled by the State. They were also concerned about the access of poor women and women in outlying districts to appropriate nursing and medical care. By 1909 the Government was funding qualified midwives in regional areas and had a couple of nurse inspectors on the payroll to verify practice.

However, as noted below, the women in the State were largely in the care of untrained and unqualified midwives until the Health Act, 1911 was enacted and its concession clauses expired in 1913. Even so, there remained so many midwifery practitioners throughout the next few decades that it is unlikely that standards were either uniform or enforced for some many years to come.

Table 5: Maternity Issues of Concern to Authorities 1909 – 1916

Source: Annual Reports of the Commissioner of Public Health 1909 - 1916

| Issue | Annual Report Year | Comments | |
|--|--------------------------|---|--|
| Licensing of Maternity Hospitals | 1913 | Maternity Hospitals are registered under the Charities Department. Commissioner argues that Charities should be under control of Health Act and administered by Health Dept, as per private hospitals. | |
| | | Home of Mercy ("which caters for a limited class") and private maternity hospitals are under Health Dept control. | |
| Registration of Lying-In Homes | 1914 | In this year, there were 48 Lying-In Homes registered in the metropolitan area (263 beds) and 99 registered in the country (318 beds). | |
| | 1915 | Lying-In Homes are registered with the State Children Department. Commissioner argues that it should reside with the Public Health Department. Both Departments agreed and amendments to the Health Act had been drafted but not actioned. | |
| Registration of Midwives | 1915 | 1,095 midwives were registered under the Health Act but only 244 held qualifications. The remaining 851 were on the roll due to a concession clause granting registration to any midwives practising prior to 1 June 1909. The concession clause ceased on 31 May 1913, so registrations subsequently were supported by qualification (ie. "recognised training in midwifery"). | |
| Establishment of a Government Maternity Hospital | 1913 | Was initially planned as an adjunct to the Home of Mercy, but this failed. Commissioner states that a new wing of Perth Public Hospital for maternity is the favoured option. | |

| Issue | Annual Report Year | Comments | |
| | 1914 | Due to advocacy from women in Perth, a separate institution is now planned. | |
| | 1916 | King Edward Memorial Hospital for Women opened on 14 July 1916. The Commissioner notes, with pleasure that "in spite of the fact that no bar has been placed upon anyone entering, that no abuse of privilege has been observed, so that beds have always been available to those cases most in need of State assistance. The fee of £3 3s. for confinement and fourteen days' care thereafter, has enabled many a mother to pass through this trying period in unwonted comfort…" 101 babes born in first 6 months of operation. | |
| Midwifery Training School, Fremantle | 1909, 1914 | The 1909 Annual Report expresses the Commissioner's (and the State's) concern at the lack of maternity nurses and the need for a training facility. There are adequate facilities and 'material' (ie maternity cases) for the training in Fremantle. | |
| | | The School opened in 1910 and trained midwives with cooperation of the Maternity Branch of The Women's Home and the Salvation Army Maternity Home in Fremantle. | |
| Government Scheme to assist midwifery in outlying areas | 1911 | Difficulties were reported by the Commissioner to arise when "settlers have not combined to secure for the nurse a suitable place to reside" | |
| Provision of Hospitals to Rural Areas | 1913 | The Commissioner noted: "Many hospitals on the goldfields were erected in response to calls from people who hoped that a prominent mining centre would be established. In the mutability of things in this life, many of such hopes have only proved too ephemeral, and places have dwindled down in importance with only a few people left in these centres; yet these hospitals are kept open when there is very little call for them." | |
| The value of children to the State | 1911 | As the Commissioner noted: "The lessened number of children born increases the value of those who survive, although the quality of the survivals is of equal, if not greater, importance, than the quantity. Still, as we are set to obey the dictates of humanity, all must be cherished with the hope that any hereditary tendencies to baseness may be overcome by environment, so that each generation be raised towards the attainment of a more perfect standard of mentality and physically endowed community". | |
| Termination of Pregnancy | 1909, 1910, 1911 | The Health Act, 1911 (S.263.4) contained a clause to assist in the detection of houses where abortions were performed. The Commissioner noted in 1909: "During the decline of Rome, it was common for children to be destroyed, because the parents considered they were doing them a kindness to rid them from facing all the vicissitudes of life. In these cases the men were responsible for this work, but in our modern civilisation, it is the women who have to bear all obloquy, suffering and death". | |

Snapshot: Births in WA 1909 – 1916 (Legitimate and Illegitimate)

The following information is drawn from the Annual Reports of the Commissioner for Public Health in the years 1909 to 1916, from the Vital Statistics and Maternity sections of the reports. Notably, the categories for reporting varied with the years, and the separate reporting of illegitimate births in the Health Department's Annual Report had ceased by 1914.

Table 6: Legitimate Births in WA 1909 - 1916

Source: Annual Reports of the Commissioner of Public Health 1909 - 1916

| Year | Males | Females | Total | |

| | 67,999 | | | |

Family Court of Western Australia records show that during the period 1899 to 1914, 363 applications for adoption were filed with the Court. This period is a decade longer than the data presented here for illegitimate births, so clearly there was no great demand to adopt illegitimate children in the first two decades of the Adoptions Act.

Comparing legitimate to illegitimate births for the period 1919-1914 shows that illegitimate births represented around 4% of total births registered in the State.

Snapshot: Numbers of Children Adopted 1964 to 1974

One of the problems in reporting data across years in this fashion is that the categories of reporting change over time. However, the following Table gives an indication of adoption trends over the eleven years 1964 to 1974, inclusive.

Categories 1 to 11 refer only to adoptions arranged by the Department, except in 1968, when private solicitors' adoptions were included for categorisation.

The data in this Table should be read in conjunction with its notes, which provide explanation for some of the figures.

| 1972 | 15 | | | | | | | 8 | | | | 306 | 151 | 457 | Decrease in number of children available for adoption (the "main factor" for this, according to the Annual Report, is that "many more mothers are now keeping their babies"). Decrease also in the number of applications for adoption. Due to an increase in staff, Departmental adoption applications increased. The Adoptions Branch moved from Claver House to 45 Havelock St in November, due to overcrowding in the previous premises. |
| 1973 | 19 | | | | | | | 5 | | | | 538 | 179 | 717 | Wards included 3 Aboriginal children adopted. Indigenous children are now referred to as "Aboriginal or part-Aboriginal". On July 1, 1972, there were further changes to the Act. These included the primacy of consideration being for the child's welfare; slight relaxation of rules to enable single persons to adopt; requirement for Director to advise the Court of the suitability of applicants; age of majority reduced to 18 years. |
| 1974 | | | | | | | | | | 334 | 247 | 581 | 202 | 783 | Due to overcrowding at Havelock St, the Adoptions Branch moved to 30 Ord St, West Perth. |

Snapshot: Government Attitudes to Adoption 1939-1997

Unless otherwise indicated, the following information is drawn from the Annual Reports of what is now the Department for Community Development and gives some insight into how public agencies thought about adoption; why they believed it was best for the children; and how it should best be managed, including changes to legislation.

"The Department communicates with every unmarried mother and after the birth of her child is always ready to offer advice and assistance...Probably the best solution of the problem of the unmarried mother and the illegitimate child is for the child to be legally adopted. By this means the child is happily settled in life and the mother is free to pick up the threads of her life and make a fresh start." (1939).

"The Department is instrumental in arranging the legal adoption of children. Orders of adoption are granted by the Judges of the Supreme Court and the applications are handled either by this Department or by solicitors. Applicants to adopt children through the Department are visited by its officers, who report on the home circumstances and suitability of the people for the information of the Judges. Children made available for adoption are examined by doctors to determine their physical fitness, blood tests are taken and their hereditary backgrounds studied before they are placed with applicants. Finally, the legal papers are drawn up and lodged in the Supreme Court to await the Judge's decision." (1947)

"For the past ten years the number of applicants desiring to adopt a child has far exceeded the babies available. There does not appear to be a conclusive solution regarding the shortage of adoptable babies. Years before the war, when the number of babies available for adoption far exceeded the number of applicants desiring to adopt a babe, there was more of a choice. Three to four weeks is about the age a babe is generally adopted and it is very rarely an older child is available for adoption. Applicants prefer to adopt a babe as young as possible and baby girls are in great demand. There are quite a number of applicants awaiting a second child to be placed with them for adoption. Several applicants desire twins."

"The applicants approved by the Department will in general have to wait three years before their turn for a child comes. This long wait prevents many persons approaching the Department and causes a certain number of Departmental applicants to withdraw their request. In the interests of the children concerned it is desirable that adoptions be arranged through the Department so that the homes to which children go can be inspected and approved by some impartial authority accustomed to the social assessment of homes and families. It seems desirable to contemplate some method by which all prospective adoptions should be scrutinised by the Child Welfare Department." (1958)

"On 1st May, 1970, a number of major changes to the Adoption of Children Act and Regulations became effective. The most significant of these amendments concerned:

1. Consents to Adoption

A judge shall not now make an order to adoption unless consent to the adoption has been given by the appropriate person or persons. Consents if signed within 7 days of confinement are not valid unless a legally qualified medical practitioner or midwife certifies that the mother was in a fit condition to give such consent. Consents signed before the birth of the child, or obtained by fraud or duress, or altered without authority, or given by a person who does not understand its nature are defective. Valid consent, once given, and not revoked within 30 days becomes irrevocable.

2. Prior approval for Adoptive Parents

Persons wishing to adopt a child must obtain the prior written approval of the Director of Child Welfare in all cases.

3. Transfer of a Child for Adoption

It is now an offence to transfer without the written permission of the Director, the possession, custody or control of a child with a view to having it adopted.

4. Guardianship of Children Offered for Adoption

The Director now automatically becomes the guardian of every child, for whom consent for adoption has been signed, pending an adoption order being granted, the consent being revoked, or a Judge of the Supreme Court making some other order in respect of that child.

With these amendments, a number of defects in the earlier legislation have been overcome." (1970)

"Some babies are not immediately available for adoption for legal reasons or because further medical investigation is indicated. To avoid the detrimental effects of such babies remaining too long in hospital the Department this year began a temporary foster mother scheme which enables babies to be cared for within a normal family setting while awaiting final adoption placement." (1971)

"On 1st July, 1972, the amendments passed in 1971 together with the new Rules for the Adoption of Children Act came into operation. The amendments brought in several significant changes to the Department's responsibilities and procedures. The principal changes were:-

- 1. The addition of a new section which stated that the welfare and interests of the child should be regarded as the paramount consideration.
- 2. Emphasis was laid on the desirability of husband and wife jointly adopting a child, however some restrictions covering the making of orders in favour of one person only have been relaxed.
- 3. The Director's rights and responsibilities of guardianship were stated. Among the responsibilities was the requirement that the Director should provide, in writing, to the Court his opinion as to whether the applicants were proper persons to adopt a child.
- 4. The age of majority was reduced to 18 years of age and certain other amendments were made to age limitations to allow for much more flexibility in the operation of the Act."

In addition to the above, the Annual Report noted the decreasing number of babies being put up for adoption. "This trend is evident all over Australia and in many other countries. The reason for the decrease is that more unmarried mothers are keeping their children. The significant factor in this appears to be a change in the community's attitude towards the expectant and unmarried mother and, more importantly, the unmarried mother's own perception of her acceptance in the community."

In order to deal with the decrease in supply of babies for adoption, relative to the demand for them, the Department introduced "a set of criteria which must be met before applicants can be assessed for approval. These criteria relate to age, ability to have children, length of time applicants have been married, the number of children they have and the length of time they have been and intend to remain in Australia."

The Adoptions Branch also provided a counselling service for "unmarried pregnant girls. The counselling aims to help the girl sort out her own feeling regarding her expected child and to provide information about the services available through the Department, and private agencies, so that she makes an informed and realistic decision whether to place the child for adoption or whether to keep it."

The Department, in collaboration with KEMH and a visiting geneticist, Dr Hockey, "standardised interviewing techniques and the assessment of mothers in order to obtain a more complete genetic background of babies subsequently made available for adoption."

The Branch also made it a matter of policy that "strenuous attempts should be made to contact all putative fathers" prior to adoption, and also to cooperate in supplying genetic information.

Areas which need improved services were identified by the Branch as being: early care, contact and aftercare for unmarried mothers who keep their babies; techniques of assessment of applicants via group sessions; aftercare for adoptive parents; attraction of more applicants, particularly Aboriginal adoptive parents for children of Aboriginal descent. (1973)

Due to the decline in numbers of children available for adoption, selection criteria are applied as above. "At present applicants who are approved are being allowed a total of two children (either natural or adopted). Applicants who take difficult-to-place children are not subject to the normal criteria but are carefully assessed for motivation."

The Department "also gave permission for 60 children to be placed for adoption by hospitals and doctors. This number is also a considerable reduction from numbers placed the previous year."

"On 1st March 1974, amendments to the Adoption of Children Act, passed in November 1973 were put into effect. The amendments had the effect of strengthening the protection the Act provides in 3 areas to the parties involved in adoption processes. The amendments:

- 1. Closed a loophole, relating to consents to adopt, in the legislation which in some rare cases placed in jeopardy the prospective Adopters' right to the child which was placed with them for adoption.
- 2. Extended the restriction on the publication of the identity of parties involved in the adoption processes.
- 3. Removed the provision which made an investigation by the department necessary whenever a parent of the child wished to adopt the child into the marriage."

The Annual Report also noted that it had been the practice of the Department (since 1970 only) to refer applications for adoption where the child was related to one or both applicants to a private solicitor. As many of these applicants could not afford the fees charged by solicitors, they had, instead of continuing with the application to adopt, been applying to the Crown Law Department for "their child to have their child known by the same name as other members of the family. This method does not give the child the same status within the marriage as would be the case if they were legally adopted." Shortage of staff, it was reported, would mean that these ex-nuptial adoptions would continue to be given low priority, with the undesirable outcomes for children remaining.

"In order to improve and standardise assessment procedures" the responsibility for these matters in the metropolitan area, which had resided with officers in the Field Division, was centralised to Adoptions Branch.

"The adoption of Aboriginal children by Aboriginals has also received considerable attention and has far reaching implications relating to the values and attitudes of our culture reflected in our assessment processes that should be applied when assessing Aboriginal families." (1974)

At the End of the Twentieth Century

In terms of the prevailing attitudes to adoption at the conclusion of the twentieth century, The Adoption Legislative Review Committee, in its "Adoption legislative review Adoption Act (1994) Final Report", wrote in 1997:

"The changes to the adoption regulations and practice have reflected developing community attitudes and social mores. There has been a gradual worldwide trend towards more openness in adoption, especially in regard to the exchange of information and contact between various parties to an adoption.

The call for more openness has resulted in two major shifts in Western Australian adoption legislation. One has been the recognition of the importance of a child's birth parents and the other, the capacity for parties to an adoption (and in certain circumstances close relatives) to access identifying adoption information. Thus the Adoption Act 1994 promotes the notion that adoption should not be a secretive process and acknowledges the reality that adoptees have two sets of parents, adoptive and birth, with two sets of family backgrounds.

While it is acknowledged in the Act that adoptive parents have a right to raise their adopted child without fear of interference and to have their family privacy respected, there is also an expectation that they be conscious of their child's original family background. Recognition is also given in the Act to the stresses associated with relinquishment and provision is made for the rights of birth parents. It is acknowledged in the Act that there is a need for people affected by past adoption practices to have access to adoption information."

The mooted changes to the new legislation would be retrospective so it would contain provisions to protect the privacy of people involved in adoption prior to 1995.

Snapshot: Status of Children Prior to Adoption

The first five years of the 1970s provided the community with a changing social climate and attitudes both to adoption and the retention of children by the birth mother.

The Annual Reports of the Department also report adoption activity differently within the decade, so a brief snapshot only has been provided here, indicating not only adoption statistics, but also the type of information the Department felt it was relevant to report to Parliament.

The overwhelming majority of adoptions were of ex-nuptial (that is, illegitimate) children. As a general observation, it would appear that the private sector handled most of the adoptions for legitimate children, but may have been affected by policy as well as the choice of the adoptive parents. The Annual Reports note that the Department had determined it would not process adoptions where one of the applicants was related to the child, except in extreme circumstances.

While there were no figures to indicate how many 'ex-nuptial' children were not put up for adoption at this time, the Annual Reports note anecdotally that there were increasingly fewer children available as the 1970s progressed (see the earlier section of this document, "Snapshot: Government Attitudes to Adoption 1939 to 1974").

Snapshot: Child's Age at Adoption 1970 to 1974

It may seem surprising that children appeared to become older at adoption as the decade progressed. However, what these figures report are Adoption Orders granted, so the babes may well have been with their prospective adoptive parents since early infancy. Changes to the Act and Regulations, which required more complex assessment and reporting to be put before the Court, meant that the workload in the Department was frequently too great for the existing complement of staff to handle (Annual Report of the Department for Community Welfare, June 30th 1974). Thus, procedural and staffing issues contributed to a backlog of applications and, possibly, older ages by the time the final Order was granted.

Snapshot: Relationship of Child to Adoptive Parents 1970 to 1974

On the Figure following the Table below, the numbers of children adopted by relatives are too small to register. Overwhelmingly, adoption was used as a remedy for unrelated adults to obtain a child of their own. The only other main type of adoption at this time was by a natural parent, adopting their child into a later marriage.

Financial assessment which includes wife's income and joint assets/liabilities;

Director's Opinion of Applicants

Health Department similar to 1968, with additionally:

KEMH social worker statement to the effect that the babe remained at KEMH from birth to age 6 months, when placed for adoption (if applicable);

Affidavit regarding the identification of child (eg from Matron, Ngala), which gives the name of the birth mother and her date of birth; name of babe and where born; placement of child while awaiting adoption; name of examining doctor; name of adoptive parents;

Years Type of Information Held in Files

Statement that the child is "not white" (eg "part-Asian") and that the applicant parents are aware of this (if applicable).

In addition to other details, Department for Community Services provided:

1988

School reports for adoption of older children, eg in step-parent adoptions;

Report on the child's placements prior to adoption if the child had been in care.

STATISTICS APPENDIX

Age of Children Adopted

Presenting an aggregate picture of the age at which children were adopted over time is problematic for a number of reasons:

- In the absence of an electronic index of basic data from the Adoption Orders held by the Family Court of Western Australia, each file would have to be opened to retrieve this information.
- 2. Where age of child is reported in Departmental Reports, the age categories are not consistent, so aggregating is not possible (except for the under 1s, but only where the data is reported, which was not every year). For example, the Tables presented below show that the age categories could change within a single reporting year (as they did in 1975 and '76, where different age categories were used to report Departmental and privately arranged adoptions).
- 3. Where the age categories are reported, the relationship of the child to the adoptive parents is not necessarily consistent across years. Thus, the Australian Institute of Health and Welfare Adoptions Australia reports record the age of children who were adopted by relatives and non-relatives during the years 1991/92 to 1994/95, but thereafter only report Australian aggregated (not State-based) data on ages.
- 4. Because there could be a long, sometimes unpredictable lapse of time between placement of a child with a family and the actual Adoption Order being granted, the child's age at their change of legal status is not necessarily a relevant piece of information in terms of their lived history.

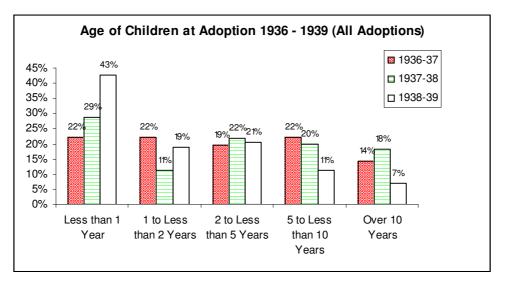

The best this project can do is to present a snapshot of information at various times since adoption became a legal possibility in this State and note some of the policy decisions that impacted on the age at adoption.

For example, the period depicted in Chart A was a time when the Department undertook around 85% of applications for adoption. As indicated in the Annual Reports of this time, adoption was seen as a permanent solution to children remaining in the care of the State as well as providing them with legitimacy and social acceptance. Of the 77 Adoption Orders granted in 1936/37, 11 were to relatives adopting children "most of these...being children over ten years" (Annual Report of the Child Welfare Department, June 30th 1937). On the whole, the older the child being adopted, the more likely the adoption was of a 'known' child. The Department's policy and practice throughout the twentieth century was to encourage the placement of babies and very young children with 'suitable' adoptive parents, presumably so the familial bond could be established early in the child's life.

The Charts following show that at the close of the century the relativity in ages of adoption continued to reflect the trend in the 1930s – children who are related to their adoptive parents were adopted later in childhood; those who were unrelated tended to be adopted as babies or young children.

The data in Chart A refer to the following total number of adoptions: 1936/37: 77 1937/38: 115 1938/39: 117

The data in Chart B refer to the following total number of adoptions: 1974/75: 326 1975/76: 364

Chart C:

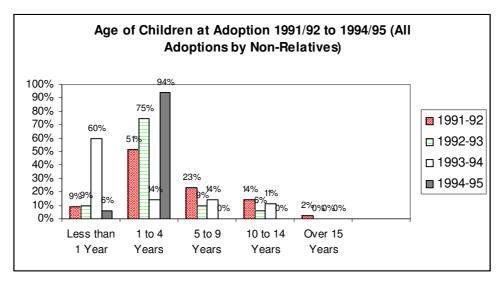

The data in Chart C refer to the following total number of adoptions: 1974/75: 202 1975/76: 167

Chart D:

The data in Chart D refer to the following total number of adoptions: 1991/92: 77 1992/93: 55 1993/94: 49 1994/95: 92

The data in Chart E refer to the following total number of adoptions: 1991/92: 43 1992/93: 32 1993/94: 35 1994/95: 34

Essentially, what the Charts above demonstrate is that the age of children adopted by non-relatives has not changed to any remarkable degree since the 1930s. Charts D and E indicate quite clearly the older profile of children adopted by relatives.

Comparative Activity: Departmental and Private Adoptions

In the very early years of the Adoptions Act, there was little state involvement in the process of applying for adoptions. However, by the 1920s the State Children Department was seeing a clear role for itself in assessing applicants and arranging adoptions. Annual Reports from these years indicate the Department was the main player in adoption – processing around 85% of applications.

It was not until the post-WW2 years that "private adoptions" gained momentum again, really hitting their stride in the 1950s and remaining a significant force – particularly during the years when the Department absented itself from the process of applying for stepchildren adoptions. Taking up this role again in the 1970s, the Department was deemed the sole agency able to apply for an Adoption Order under the Adoption Act 1994.

Total Adoption Applications Filed with the Court

The Family Court of Western Australia collates its adoption files in year groups – starting at January 1 and ending at December 31 for any given year. Each file is given a sequential number and, in the absence of an electronic indexing system, counting the numbers allows a total of Applications Filed to emerge.

It is currently not possible to easily distill from the Registers the number of Orders Granted in any calendar year as the Registers are arranged alphabetically.

Total Applications Filed 1 January 1899 to 31 December 2003: 21,269

Comparing Applications with Orders Granted

Given the limitations on available retrospective data, it is possible to make a rough comparison between Applications Filed and Orders Granted for the years 1940 to 2003.

Total Applications Filed 1 January 1940 to 31 December 2003 (from Table 17): 18.895

Total Orders Granted 1 July 1939 to 30 June 2003 (from Table 16): 17,839 (data missing from 1979, 1986 and 1987). Substituting the decade average for the missing years gives 17,839 + 566 (for 1979) + 263 + 263 (for 1986 and 1987) = 18,931 Total Orders Granted for the period.

In these comparative figures, Orders Granted slightly exceeds Applications made. However, allowing for the estimations above, the comparison does indicate that most Applications proceed to an Order being granted. Certainly, this accords with anecdotal opinion expressed by Family Court staff that the number of failed or withdrawn Applications has always been small. In counting the number of files held by the Family Court, then, we are able to gain a fairly clear picture of the number of actual Adoptions recognised by the Western Australian jurisdiction.

Relationship of Children to the Adoptive Parent(s)

Children can come to an adoption in a variety of ways. They may be entirely unknown to the Applicants or have a pre-existing relationship.

Of those children who were unknown to the Applicants prior to the adoption process, most were children born in the State and whose needs were not distinguishable from children who were not available for adoption. Sometimes, however, children available for adoption had what the Department termed "special needs" and parents who could meet these needs were actively sought. Another category of child who came into the system in the 1970s was the child who had been born overseas and adopted by parents resident in Western Australia – an "International Adoption". While there was sometimes a pre-existing relationship between international adoptees and their adoptive parents, the most common scenario was that a couple sought to include a previously-unknown child in their family.

Children from the family have always been included in Adoption statistics. It was not uncommon in the early years, for example, for an 'illegitimate' child to be adopted by a family member, or for an orphan to be adopted by members of his/her extended family. Over time, the adoption of step-children, too, became increasingly acceptable until today this type of adoption is the most common. Another form of previous relationship arises through fostering – since 1998-99 this type of adoption has no longer been distinguished in the statistics but is included along with other types of 'known child' adoptions.

Enquiries and Information

Adoptees, their birth parents, adoptive parents and other relatives have been shown to have an interest in information about the adoption and sometimes wish to have contact. The Department has been keeping statistics on enquiries prior to the introduction of the formal Contact Register. Applications for information and/or contact and the vetoes that are applied in this regard are now reported nationally. In the period for which statistics have been recorded, notable jumps in the number of enquiries occurred in 1987 and again in 2001. While no data has been kept which explains the increased interest, it is possible that reviews of existing Adoption legislation which brought the topic into the public arena were a factor.

Some of the information from Table 20 is represented graphically, below, to more clearly indicate both the trends in enquiries (surges in 1987 and 1995 being associated with publicity and enabling strategies, including the introduction of the 1994 Act) and the relative interest shown by particular groups. Adoptees remain the main group of enquirers.

With the exception of Victoria, most States allow a person to veto contact arising from the adoption from a party or related person. Western Australia allows joint vetoes (that is, vetoes on contact and on identifying information) but other States report these separately. Hence, the Adoption Australia reports distinguish the vetoes and this is reflected in the Tables which follow. However, we do have information for joint lodgements for two years in WA, and this is presented in the third Table in this series.

| 1992- 93 | 24 | n.a | 11 | 35 | A veto placed by a birth parent is treated as a veto on both identifying information and contact, which are not recorded separately. |
| 1994- 95 | 220 | 246 | 113 | 579 | These figures show joint lodgement of contact and information vetoes across all groups and are in addition to the separate lodgement of either contact or information vetoes reported in the previous tables. |

The flurry of activity in lodging vetoes around the time of the 1994 Act has impacted on the total number of vetoes in the WA system thereafter, as the following Tables demonstrate.

From 1 January 1995, a person may lodge an information veto only if they were party to the adoption. Their veto can be lodged in more than one relative status. |

| 2003 | 301 | 367 | 152 | 1 | 0 | 0 | 821 | Includes vetoes from 192 adoptive mothers and 175 adoptive fathers; and 146 birth mothers and 6 birth fathers. |

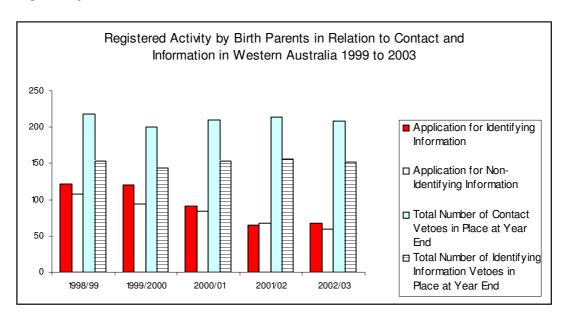

Some of the information in Tables 22, 23, 27 and 28 shows the type of interest Adopted Persons are taking in the registration of formal requests for information and contact. While the sample years are small, they do represent the greater freedom of information allowed under the Adoption Act 1994 and, while applications for information appear to be trending down, they are not inconsiderable. Vetoes, which are carried forward from one year to the next (unless lifted), are increasing at a very slow rate, as demonstrated in Tables 25 and 26.

Figure 7: Applications for Information and Contact Vetoes Lodged through the Contact Register by Adopted Persons in Western Australia, 30/6/1999 to 30/6/2003.

The Figure below, again drawing on information in Tables 22, 23, 27 and 28 shows the type of interest Birth Parents are taking in the registration of formal requests for information and contact. Again, trends are downward, but steady. As in the preceding Figure, it is interesting to note the relativity between requests for identifying and non-identifying information. In some ways, this may point to an interest or need to have information about context and circumstances almost as much as the 'owned stories' or facts of someone's life.
